

Thirty-two years ago, the Canadian House of Commons unanimously resolved to eliminate child poverty by 2000. However, in 2021, child poverty persists in communities from coast to coast.

In New Brunswick, child poverty rates are unevenly distributed across eight cities, from a high of over 30% in Campbellton, Bathurst, and Saint John, to a low of 12.2% in Dieppe. [Average is 26%]
